One of Most Astounding Developments to Affect War-Fearing World

TRANSCRIPT TO PRES'T

Is Claimed To Be Underlying Reason for Roosevelt's Peace Appeal

By H. R. Knickerbocker
(Copyright by I. N. S.)

PARIS, Apr. 17.—One of the most astounding developments yet to affect a war-fearing world—a reported threat by Reichsfuehrer Hitler against the entire western hemisphere—was disclosed to this correspondent today.

From a well-informed advisor in Europe, President Roosevelt was said to have received a verbatim transcript of a conversation between Hitler and one of his most trusted aides, before the Reich occupation of Czechoslovakia, ostensibly disclosing his real ambition and intent of world conquest.

It was set forth as the underlying reason for President Roosevelt's peace appeal to the dictators on Saturday and for his whole policy of strengthening America's military, naval and diplomatic defenses against a menace to our naval security.

But the author for the disclosure to this correspondent said that the verbatim report proved the immediate resistance of radical measures of self-defense in the western hemisphere.

The report said: "I intend to go in and take the whole of Bohemia and Moravia and make Slovakia a protectorate. By Autumn I shall have

Two Showers Arranged For Miss E. Mulligan

Miss Eleanor Mulligan, 162 Buckley street, was tendered two miscellaneous showers last week. The first was given Tuesday evening by Miss Beatrice Priory, Trenton, N. J., at Miss Priory's home. Games and dancing were enjoyed and refreshments served.

Those attending: Mrs. Joseph Priory, Mrs. Stella Hillman, Mrs. Edward McGrath, Miss Margaret Whalen, Mrs. Herbert Eccles, Miss Margaret Murray, Miss Helen Murray, Trenton, N. J.; Miss Mary LaFors, Roebing, N. J.; Mrs. Lester VanHise, Philadelphia.

The second shower was held Thursday evening, when Miss Mulligan was surprised at the home of Mrs. Jerry O'Neill, Jefferson avenue, the party being given by Miss Margaret Duffy, Buckley street, and Miss Catherine Weik, Otter street. The evening was enjoyed in a social way and dancing. Refreshments were served. Favors were yellow baskets of candy.

Those attending: Miss Eleanor Fallon, Philadelphia; Mrs. John Cunningham and Miss Margaret Fitzpatrick, Trenton, N. J.; Misses Eleanor Weik, Alice Wiltshire, Katharine McGinley, Aletha Myers, Rose Flannigan; Mrs. Alfred McVaine, Mrs. Charles Ford, Mrs. John Mulligan, Mrs. Francis Bossler.

Tentilucci-DeLuca Wedding Takes Place on Saturday

The wedding of Miss Philomena E. DeLuca, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph DeLuca, 204 Lafayette street, and Angelo D. Tentilucci, son of Carmen Tentilucci, 915 Cedar street, took place Saturday afternoon at three o'clock in St. Ann's Catholic Church, the Rev. Peter Pinci officiating. Miss Frances Tamburello played the wedding march.

Attending the bride as maid of honor was her cousin, Miss Elizabeth DeLuca, 405 Lafayette street. The bridesmaid was Miss Ann DeLuca, 304 Lafayette street, sister of the bride; and the best man was Dominick Russo, 917 Cedar street.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was charming in a white lace gown over white satin, with Princess lines. The long skirt ended with a train. The veil of tulle with face veil had a crown of tulle trimmed with satin and orange blossoms. She wore doe-skin slippers and carried lilies.

The maid of honor wore a hyacinth blue marquisette. The form-fitting bodice featured a heart-shaped neckline. The skirt was cut long and full. With this was worn a lace bolero jacket with short puffed sleeves, the tone of her gown. Her blue felt hat with a brim was trimmed with a veil of charrueuse tone; her kid sandals were in varied tones of blue, green and yellow, and she carried tea roses. The bridesmaid was attired in charrueuse tone marquisette fashioned like the gown of the maid of honor. Her slippers were the same and her charrueuse felt hat was trimmed with a hyacinth blue veil. She carried tea roses.

A reception was held at the home of the bride, 100 attending. The couple left Saturday evening for Atlantic City, N. J. Mr. and Mrs. Tentilucci will reside at the home of the groom, 915 Cedar street.

The bride graduated from Bristol High School in 1934.

SENDING FLEET TO PACIFIC RESULT OF SECRET WORD

Change in Plans Due to Secret Information of What Hitler Planned To Do

EXPECTED MAJOR MOVE

By Robert G. Nixon
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent
(Copyright, 1939)

WASHINGTON, Apr. 17.—(INS)—President Roosevelt's sudden decision to order immediate return of the fleet to the Pacific was caused by secret reports from European capitals that Chancellor Hitler was preparing a new lightning blow which probably would plunge Europe into the long-feared second world war, it was learned today.

The sudden removal of the fleet from the Atlantic to the Pacific was directed at halting a new southward thrust by the other end of the axis, Japan.

Definite information reached Washington that Japan awaits only the outbreak of a general war in Europe to strike at French Indochina, the Dutch East Indies and British Malay states, with their vitally needed oil reserves, tin deposits, and rubber plantations—and even the Philippines.

Bus Driver Found Dead In Bed; Burial Today

Funeral for George Carter, 33, of Frankford, who was found dead in bed early Friday morning, will be held today, with burial in Philadelphia.

Carter was employed as a driver by the Neibauer Bus Company on the Torresdale-Morrisville route. His lifeless body was discovered by his wife when she went to call him early Friday morning. He is survived by his wife and a daughter.

St. Ann's Church Is The Scene of Spring Wedding

A wedding Sunday at 3:30 p. m. in St. Ann's Catholic Church, united Miss Mary Mocer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Mocer, 1100 Beaver street, and Anthony Tamburello, son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Tamburello, 511 Pond street. Miss Frances Tamburello played Lohengrin's Wedding March; and Miss Mary Colella, Beaver street, sang "The Rosary" and "Ave Maria." The Rev. Peter Pinci officiated.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was gowned in white satin, fashioned on Princess lines. The shirred bodice was trimmed with a pearl ornament. The long full skirt was cut with a train. The tulle veil with face veil gracefully fell from a wreath of orange blossoms. Her slippers were white satin, and she carried calla lilies.

The maid of honor was her cousin, Miss Mary Manzo, 1106 Beaver street. She wore aqua chiffon over taffeta of the same tone. The long skirt was cut with a short train. She wore a large off-the-face aqua chiffon hat edged with tulle and vari-tone flowers aqua velvet streamers and chin strap. Her satin sandals matched her gown, and she carried a colonial bouquet of pink roses.

The bridesmaid, Miss Edna Saparito, Philadelphia, a cousin of the groom, was attired in a gown and accessories fashioned like the maid of honor's. She also carried a colonial bouquet of pink roses.

The best man was Salvatore Margiotti, Chestnut street, a cousin of the bride.

A reception was held at Trades Hall for 300 guests. The couple left for Washington, D. C., for one week. Mr. and Mrs. Tamburello will reside at 511 Pond street.

We're Surely On The Map

(By "The Stroller")

The tales the express company trucks at the local railroad station could tell if they could talk!

They would be tales of a diversity of industry in Bristol, and the variety of shipments that go from this borough to all parts of the world.

This week the trucks were laden with: Parchment paper and chemicals; plants for the World's Fair in New York; seeds and adhesives; fuses and flares, carpets and whiskey; airplane parts and printed matter.

And there are times when the trucks are laden down with countless other, items manufactured and grown in Bristol, all carrying the name of this borough to the four corners of the earth.

Here and There in Bucks County Towns

Memorial services for the deceased members of the Capitol View Fire Company and its auxiliaries, of Morrisville, were held at the All Saints Memorial Chapel, in Fallsington, last evening.

The vested choir gave an attractive musical program. The Rev. Francis Smith, rector, and chaplain and life member of Capitol View, preached the sermon.

Albert Campi, 45, 1214 South Twelfth street, Philadelphia, charged with being a professional thief or pickpocket, who was given a hearing before Justice of the Peace W. Carlile Hobensack, at Doylestown, was placed under a bond of $500 for good behavior for one year.

Justice of the Peace Hobensack, who explained that Campi was found guilty, said Campi promised to stay out of Bucks county.

"We have been having quite a lot of pickpocketing going on in various places within the county and the Bucks countians don't intend to put up with it," said Justice Hobensack.

Campi, who had nearly $50 on him when apprehended by Chief of Police, James P. Welsh, was permitted by Justice Hobensack to use that money toward payment of the costs and bond unless someone in the audience, which had assembled at the Doylestown Armory for the showing of a benefit film, "Doylestown, Old and New," could identify money which was stolen and make a proper claim of ownership.

"As long as there have been no complaints that anyone had his pockets picked it is taken for granted the money is your own and belonged to you," said Justice Hobensack.

Campi was recognized by several Philadelphia detectives who were in the audience of more than 500 who saw the film.

Under the auspices of the Child Research Clinic of The Woods Schools, leaders in education, mental hygiene, child welfare, parent education and related fields concerned with children and their well-being will gather to consider "Twenty-five Years of Progress in Education," on Tuesday, April 25, at Langhorne. The Conference will be conducted by outstanding authorities, with special reference to the exceptional child—the slow child, the backward child, the problem child, the child with behavior problems, the child with reading and speech difficulties, and the like.

Two motorists, Henry Hunsberger, of Quakertown, and Randolph Blinn, of Washington, D. C., charged with involuntary manslaughter, were exonerated at an inquest held by Coroner Dr. H. Clayton Moyer in the office of Justice of the Peace W. Carlile Hobensack, at Doylestown.

The two motorists were involved in a three-car accident which resulted in the death of Clarence Still, 26, and Walter R. Bowser, 28, two Doylestown Negroes, March 6 on Route 263.

The jury, composed of Russell B. Gulick, foreman; Mrs. Elsie M. Conard, Mrs. Della W. Hoffman, former Postmaster Samuel E. Spare, W. Lester Trauch, all of Doylestown, and Alonzo L. Bishop, of Blooming Glen, in their verdict found the two motorists not negligent and exonerated them from all blame.

The programs, which are expected to be attended by a few hundred women from the various women's clubs in the county, will take place in New Hope Methodist Church.

President May Take Hand In Coal Question

New York, Apr. 17.—President Roosevelt may take a hand today in the deadlock negotiations between the soft coal arbitrators and the union leaders at the request of Mayor F. H. LaGuardia, of New York City.

In a telegram pleading for Presidential interference, Mayor LaGuardia painted a stark picture of disruption of the normal life of the nation's largest city unless the stalemate over a new contract is quickly broken, and the 320,000 idle miners in the Appalachian field immediately resume work.

City officials, meanwhile, were preparing to "pipe" electricity from an up-State power company to keep the city subway in operation.

Mrs. Favato To Face Jury

Philadelphia, April 17.—Second alleged member of Philadelphia's bizarre murder-for-insurance to go on trial, Mrs. Carina Favato, professed believer in witchcraft, will face a jury tomorrow on charges of poisoning her heavily-insured step-son.

The 45-year-old defendant was indicted in connection with the death of young Phillip Ingrao, and of her common-law husband, Charles Favato.

Herman Petrillo, 49, of near Langhorne, was convicted of first degree murder, March 23, as purported ring-leader of the conspiracy.

Congress Calls A Halt

Washington, April 15. MEN whose job it is to observe governmental affairs in Washington believe that this Congress is unique in one thing at least—it is the first in our history which, against the will of the White House, has struggled to save public money instead of spending it. Even if it achieves very little, the mere fact that it is trying at all is sensational.

IN other words, this is the only Congress ever known which has tried to curtail executive expenditures, just as this is the only President who has denounced and resisted the efforts of the legislative branch to economize. In the past it has been the other way around. What makes this situation more significant is that the Congress which wants to economize is dominated by the same party to which the President who resists belongs.

THE explanation is simple enough. Despite experience, Mr. Roosevelt is still insisting upon his theory that the way to bring about recovery is to continue priming the pump with Federal funds, whereas members of Congress reflect a sentiment in the country which has turned against this great outpouring of money, is shocked at the inexcusable waste and indefensible cost of the WPA, is alarmed by the height of the debt, dismayed by the depth of the deficit, apprehensive lest national bankruptcy, once so vividly predicted by Mr. Roosevelt as the inevitable result of the very policy he is pursuing, should come.

Tullytown Firemen Plan To Conduct A Fair Soon

The members of Tullytown Fire Company are planning to hold a firemen's fair some time during the month of May. The exact dates will be announced shortly.

Foreman Wilmer R. Anderson reported the company had answered two calls during the month. One a grass fire on the Gushue property and the other a building of the Tullytown Sand & Gravel Company at Wheatseat.

John Tares a member of the company recently completed an instructor's course in first aid work, and will organize a class among members of the fire company. The first class will be held on Monday evening, April 24th, in the fire house. Any member wishing to join this class is urged to get in touch with Mr. Tares at once.

200 BOYS, MEN SERVED COMMUNION BREAKFAST

Formal Opening of Catholic Boys' Club Quarters Takes Place On Sunday

PROMINENT SPEAKERS

For the Catholic Boys' Club, yesterday was a real "red letter" day, for April 16th had been looked forward to by the membership as the time of their first group Holy Communion and breakfast, and the formal opening of the club headquarters.

Promptly at 10 minutes of eight, the procession moved up Radcliffe street from St. Mark's School hall, where the club has its headquarters, to St. Mark's Church. Fully 200 boys and men were in line, headed by cross-bearer, William Vitch, and accompanied by John Ferry, flag carrier. This crowd filed into the church to receive their first Holy Communion as a body. The Rev. Father Albert Glass said the Mass, and was assisted by Father Paul Baird. Miss Catherine Keating had charge of the console.

After the mass all the boys and men marched behind the Stars and Stripes, to the school hall, where an enjoyable breakfast was served by women of the parish. President Joseph Quigley very capably introduced the speakers, after Father Baird had invoked the blessing. Those making addresses were, in addition to Father Baird: Father Glass, Dr. George T. Fox, Dr. James P. Lawler, Neal McDevitt, Michael Vesay.

WHITE COLLAR WORKERS

Since the beginning of the depression—you know, that depression we used to have—there has been a great deal said about the college man—the white-collar man—being the main problem of this economic situation. There was work perhaps for the man who served with his hands but not enough for the individual who served with his brains. But there is said to be a much better outlook in this direction right now.

Temple University in Philadelphia recently began an inquiry to determine what had become of the graduating class of last year. And it was found 78 per cent of these former pupils were on permanent pay rolls. Furthermore, the university reports, business and industry are demanding more college-trained men and women. An increasing number of personnel directors and other representatives of large corporations have visited the school in the last year seeking future employees.

Most of the demands for college-trained men and women, the report says, come from nationally known concerns, which insist upon university training as the basis for work in accounting, marketing, salesmanship, and general business administration.

NEW STYLE IN LEARNING

One thinks of education as an essential part of the framework of the nation, as a steady and dependable bulwark of civilization, a constantly developing element in the growth of mankind, leading ever to more and more knowledge of self and the world about. But education, since it is in the hands of human beings, suffers from the weaknesses to which human flesh is heir. Among these may be counted the vagaries of fashion.

Contending forces in the ranks of the learned succeed from time to time in having their way. Lately there has been a strong tendency away from classicism toward a liberal reception to the newest and most materialistic and opportunist ideas. According to the leaders of the pedagogical group which met during the last few days in New London, Conn., a new fashion is setting in. They say that the style now indicates a swing toward renewed interest in classics, as well as a sharp turn toward religion and tolerance by college students.

If we may go by the findings of the New England Classical Association, the end of Greek and Latin in college courses is not yet. The survey shows that in several institutions of higher education a majority of the students have elected to study Greek and Latin, religion and tolerance, the classics as a basis of the knowledge of history and our own language, as responses to the challenge of the present age.

The new fashion may have a short a sway as is customary with styles, but for the time being, at any rate, we are promised by the teachers an increased understanding of the philosophic bases of life, as taught by the spokesmen of Europe's earliest civilized peoples.

Our stock of buried gold now touches the 15-billion mark, and any day we should begin to taste it in the younger Kentucky bourbon.

Apology: Vanity confessing a fault in order to put over the idea that faults are few in such a wonderful person.

ECHOES OF THE PAST

By Courier Staff Member

Review of the news as it appeared in the Bucks County Gazette issue dated at Bristol Sept. 20, 1877. The Gazette, a weekly newspaper published in Bristol, was discontinued following its merger with the Courier.

The following news items were culled from the issue of the Bucks County Gazette of September 20, 1877:

We are happy to announce that a "Grand Army Post" has been established in Bristol, and feel confident that it will soon be the equal of any outside of Philadelphia, if indeed surpassed even there. The post has been appropriately named "M. Clay Beatty," after one of Bristol's military heroes—one who laid down his young life for the cause of the Union. May his memory ever be revered. The objects of the "Grand Army of the Republic" are to preserve kind and fraternal relations among those soldiers, sailors and marines who united to suppress the late rebellion, to perpetuate the memory and history of the dead, to assist comrades to extend aid to widows and orphans, to maintain true allegiance to the United States, discountenancing whatever tends to weaken loyalty, and finally to encourage the spread of universal liberty, equal rights, and justice to all men. Membership is restricted to those who during the trying days between 1861 and 1865, were sworn into the military or naval service of the United States and were honorably discharged therefrom.

Thomas Hughes, one of the oldest doctors of this county, died at Doylestown, last Sunday. His exact age is not known, but it was between 55 and 57 years.

The Temperance people have rented the building on Cedar street, opposite the Masonic Hall, of William H. Booz, to be fitted up as a reading room.

A new survey of the Delaware River and its bay is proposed. It is 36 years since the last complete survey was made.

The Bristol Rowing Club has consummated arrangements for making a club house of Dr. Baker's former residence.

Joseph Weidner, who drives the team for J. C. Petter, was returning home from Philadelphia, Saturday night, and where he left the turnpike for the Newportville Road is very lonely, so he thought possibly if there were any persons who would wish to attack him, this would be the place, so he got a hatchet which he always carries with him and placed near him on the seat, so as to be handy in case of an emergency. Sure enough when nearing Allen Hibbs' farm, one of his horses shied and a man stepped out into the road and asked for a ride, and upon being refused struck at Weidner with a club which he dodged so that it missed his head but struck him a severe blow on the breast, causing him to fall back-wards, in doing which his hand fortunately lighted on the hatchet which he picked up and recovering his perpendicular, saw his assailant getting up on the sly, so he gave the hatchet a swing and struck him on the top of the head, apparently knocking him on the top of the head and apparently knocking him senseless in the road. He then hastened to Newportville where he procured help, and went back to look for the wounded man, but if the hatchet had not adhered to it blood and hair, and Weidner had not felt very sensibly the bruise on his breast, he might have been led to suppose it was all a dream, for the man had disappeared.

SOUTHAMPTONVILLE—Railroad work is being pushed forward rapidly; men have been employed by the contractor, M. McHugh, to haul iron from Fox Chase to be used on long hauls, dirt cars being substituted in place of carts, for moving the dirt.

The Great Game of Politics

NOTWITHSTANDING these facts, neither at this session nor at the next, will Congress save a great deal of money. Not much progress toward restoring national solvency will be made for a very simple reason—it just cannot be done without White House leadership. Mr. Roosevelt has made it clear that so long as he is in the White House the leadership will be in the other direction. So far this session every move toward economy has met the stiffest sort of opposition from him. In his January message he asserted that any reduction in expenditure would be disastrous and practically defied Congress to attempt it.

IT IS amazing that under such circumstances, and with the President trying to make it appear that Congress is indifferent to suffering and distress—it is amazing that Congress should make any economies at all. Of course, the $50,000,000 cut off the relief appropriation and the $102,000,000 sliced from the budget estimates of the various departments is not a great deal in a total of nine billions. It is the fact that any reduction at all is made rather than the size which is important. It means that Congress, whose prodigality with Federal funds heretofore has had to be restrained by the Executive, itself has called a halt upon the Executive.

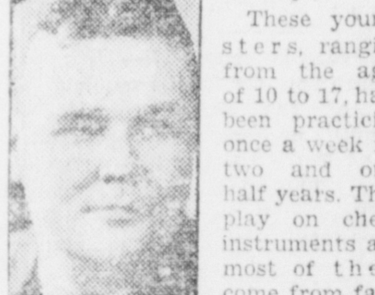

NEVERTHELESS, as Senator Byrd points out, no real step toward a balanced budget can be taken without Presidential leadership, which is another way of saying that that must wait until we have another President. Congress cannot do it alone. For one thing, without White House support the pressure is too great to resist. It is entirely possible that before the session ends the $150,000,000 which Congress has cut will be more than made up by yielding in other directions.

FOR another thing, the natural disposition of a Congressman is to get as much in the way of Federal jobs and Federal funds for his district as he can. That is normal and understandable. In the past, it has strained many a President to keep Congress from running wild in the matter of appropriations, which makes the present reversal of positions the more striking. No one expects Congress, without Presidential pressure, to make any really great cuts. Obviously there are two things which must be done if we are to get back even to the seven-billion-dollar budget of 1937, and Congress can do neither alone.

Behind the Scenes in HOLLYWOOD

By HARRISON CARROLL

HOLLYWOOD—Biggest thrill I've had in days was listening to a junior symphony orchestra which will appear in the Jascha Heifetz picture for Goldwyn.

Harrison Carroll

These youngsters, ranging from the ages of 10 to 17, have been practicing once a week for two and one-half years. They play on cheap instruments and most of them come from families of moderate circumstances.

The first cellist, Mary Louise Zeyen, is the 10-year-old daughter of a letter carrier. One of the most talented of the violinists is a Filipino boy.

The man who moulded this remarkable organization is Pete Moreblum, a Russian who teaches at a local university. Alfred Newman, head of the Goldwyn music department, is rehearsing the orchestra for the picture.

We heard them play the overture to "The Barber of Seville" and it really was amazing. And you have a surprise coming in Jacqueline Nash, a 11-year-old singer who has been signed for the picture. She has been on the radio since she was three and one-half years old and she comes from Canada.

Wonder why Canada produces so many child singers? Both Deanna Durbin and Bobby Breen also hail from there.

Did Charlie Chaplin tide Jackie Coogan over that tough period by lending him $15,000? We hear it on very good authority. It was Charlie, of course, who gave the Kid his first break.

In the days when James Cagney, Frank McHugh and Allen Jenkins were struggling to get a stage break, they often shared rooms. There was another member of the group, an older man named Will Crawford, who did some acting and, on the side, earned quite a reputation as a wood carver.

We heard the story the other day and it is typical of Cagney. He is building a new home and so he has hired Crawford to carve woodcut reliefs on 17 doors in his new place. Each door will require three weeks work.

Masculine students at Columbia University picked Hedy Lamarr as

ONE is a reorganization of the governmental departments by which the countless useless and expensive agencies created by the New Deal will be abolished. It is estimated that at least $200,000,000 a year can thus be saved, but no move to do that will be made by Mr. Roosevelt. On the contrary, he is soon to appoint six additional and unnecessary secretaries at $10,000 each and wants to create a new $10,000 Under Secretary for the Commerce Department. The other thing is a revamping of the whole WPA situation by which the administration of relief will be put back into the hands of the States, where it can be done for one-half the cost and with doubled efficiency.

MR. Roosevelt is immovably against both these things. Clearly, Congress is helpless by itself. Just as clearly, no great economy can be made in other directions. All of which means that the most can be hoped for until after the next election is that the expenditures will be held at approximately the present levels. That's the best Congress can do, but considering the attitude of the President, that is a great deal.

#The DOCTOR" by MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

CHAPTER XXVIII

Caesar was killed that summer, run down by the Lewis car. He was romping with another dog in the street, and the car, running well above the city speed limit, went over Caesar. Run without stopping, too, leaving Chris to carry in the faithful creature that had loved him, and later to give him decent burial under a tree in the back yard.

Lily did not dare to speak to him that day, and she told Miss Barker later on over the back fence that he was acting very queer, and that he had thought a lot of the dog. She was dozing in her chair late that afternoon when Chris, having seen the Lewis car on its way home, deliberately put on his hat and started up the hill. He was tight-lipped as he entered the driveway. He did not go to the house, but circled around it until he came to the garage, and there confronted the Lewis chauffeur, a big man, kicking his tires and smoking a cigarette. The man knew trouble when he saw it coming. He threw away the cigarette.

"You killed my dog today," said Chris.

"Yeah?" Why didn't you keep it out of the street?"

"Killed it and went on," said Chris inexorably.

"You and your damn dog! If you're looking for trouble, you've come to the right place."

"That's precisely what I'm looking for," said Chris, and hauled off with a straight right which landed on the chauffeur's jaw. Five minutes later he picked up his hat and departed. He was considerably battered, but he felt better than he had for days. The fact that he had left his opponent sitting on the cement floor, groggy and bloody, was comforting. Some of the accumulated fury of days and weeks had exploded during the battle.

As a matter of fact Chris, having accepted Beverly's marriage, did his best to forget her that summer. Alone on hot nights he was quietly preparing for Europe and study on Letitia's five thousand dollars. He was freshening his college German, and even studying a small phrase book of common medical terms. He was reading surgery again, also, and spending time in the operating room watching other men work. Katie, on the operating-room staff now, would see him coming in with that eager thrust of the shoulders as if his mind were traveling ahead of his body, and would watch him surreptitiously. When he smiled at one of the other nurses, she would grow hot with jealousy.

It was in August that he took off Scott's finger.

"It's got to go, Scott."

"Go ahead, but I'd like to save the hand."

But Chris, with the X-ray man on the table, surveyed the dried and burned tissues and knew that eventually the hand would go also.

"Why don't you quit, Scott?"

"It's all I know. I can't let my family starve."

One day, however, going unexpectedly into the X-ray room, he found Scott practicing writing with his left hand. Neither man said anything, and Scott put his paper aside and showed him his fish in the aquarium. Lately he had taken up the raising of small tropical fish as a hobby. They required considerable care, and Chris surmised that by filling his leisure time he helped him.

Ursula Martin's boy was born early in the fall. Chris attended her himself. She had insisted on going into the ward. Now and then he saw her there, rocking quietly among the others and awaiting the miracle of birth. At times, when the nurses were busy, he would find her holding some fretful baby, and would marvel at the tenderness in her face.

She was still calm when preparing for her labor. She took down her long, heavy hair and braided it, and walked quietly to the delivery room when her time came.

It was a hot day, and the birth was slow and difficult. Chris, leaning over her after it was over, was dripping with sweat. But she was smiling.

"A boy?" she said feebly. "I wanted a boy. I shall call him for you, Doctor."

He put the child down in the crib. "Then I'll keep an eye on him for you," he said. "We'll make a good job of him, Ursula."

She looked happier after that. She could depend on him. She had felt weak and alone. Now she was not alone. And Chris, stopping in Miss Nettie's room on the way out, told her a little of the story.

"She wanted the child," he said, "and now she has it. The father will pay her something, so that's all right. But I'd like to feel that some one knows about her while I'm away, in case of trouble."

"You know who the father is?"

"I know," he said briefly, and she eyed him.

"You are an incurable sentimentalist, Chris," she told him. "What on earth is this girl to you? And haven't you enough on your hands without her?"

But she agreed, and he left more easy in his mind. Later on he told Ursula, and she thanked him gravely.

"But there will be no trouble, Doctor," she said. "I'm strong, and so is he."

"And you won't make any trouble?"

"Why should I?" I have my baby."

The next morning he saw in the paper that the Jervis Ameses had returned from their honeymoon and were to live in the Lewis house. Beverly had come home—with Jerry, of course—to Holmes smiling at the door, to her father, formal but apparently pleased, in the hall with his new tapestries on the walls and flowers everywhere. She was not unhappy. Jerry loved her after his fashion. But she had no feeling of belonging to him, or indeed to anybody, even to her father. That small, dapper man, cool and aloof and obsessed with his own affairs, seemed to her now an absurd figure around which to have built a furious loyalty; and looking at him over the long length of the handsome dinner table that night, taciturn and self-centered, she knew suddenly that she had thrown away the substance of living for this shadow, arrogant in his dinner clothes, critical of his meal, impatient at the service.

"Hurry up, Holmes! Get some food in here."

"Yes, sir. In a moment, sir."

The footman hurrying in, Holmes impassive, Jerry hungry and drinking too much champagne, and herself alone in her mother's place, isolated from them both, from them all.

"That's your fourth glass, Jerry. And you had a lot of cocktails."

"Don't come home from a wedding trip every day, honey."

Sitting there in the candlelight, with her arms and neck bare and her white dress shining, and facing her situation with her usual humor, Beverly knew that if she did not love Jerry, she was fond of him. He was cheerful. He sang in his bath, whistled while dressing. If his superabundant vitality had tired her at times, there were others when she was grateful for it. And he was proud of her. On that trip of theirs he had found friends in the most unlikely places, would immediately plan a party and survey her carefully after she had dressed for it.

"You're looking very lovely, sweetheart."

He would kiss her passionately, and she would do her best to respond. But it was acting, and he knew it. He had never really won her. He would release her and go away, drinking a cocktail or two to restore his self-respect and lessen his sense of failure. Even after three months of marriage he was still courting her, she knew; still trying to win her.

ON THE SCREENS

GRAND

Romance and adventure, comedy and thrills emerge in a whirlwind of impetuous, headlong action throughout the colorful scenes of "Gunga Din," sensational screen drama of British army life in India. The picture opened last night at the Grand Theatre before an audience which responded enthusiastically to its vigorous appeal, voiced in the resonant crash of field guns, the dazzling glitter of polished steel, as bayonets and native blades cross in deadly hand-to-hand fighting, all etched in unforgettable detail against the exotic atmosphere of the mysterious Orient.

BRISTOL

Visual proof that the screen can capture all the drama, thrills and vigor of a stage play—and even improve upon it in several aspects—is Paramount's "Gunga Din," one third of a nation which impressed local moviegoers last night at the Bristol Theatre, at its local premiere. Just as its predecessor did during its epoch-making run on Broadway a season ago.

Women's Clubs To Hear Mrs. Sara M. Soffel

The afternoon meeting is scheduled for three o'clock. Mrs. Calvin S. Boyer, Doylestown, president, in charge.

A guest of honor will be Mrs. James G. Chaffant, chairman of organization of the State Federation of Women's Clubs. During the afternoon, Edward N. Skipper, field secretary of the Pennsylvania S. P. C. A., will give an illustrated lecture, "The Human Side of Birds."

The program committee, composed of Mrs. Samuel L. Althouse, Sellers-ville; Mrs. Walter W. Ely, of New Hope; Mrs. Benjamin Eastburn, Buckingham; Mrs. Evelyn B. Johnson, of New Hope, and Mrs. Henry L. Eastwood, Buckingham, has arranged for a program of special music and the leading feature of this will be a brief concert by the North Penn A Cappella Choir, of which J. Edward Moyer, Perkasie, is the director. The choir will sing during the meeting in the evening.

Afternoon session will include: Call to order, Mrs. Boyer; singing of county song, with Miss Lillian E. Van-Ardsdalen, Yardley, county chairman of music, directing; salute to flag led by Mrs. Samuel L. Paxson, a member of the New Hope Women's Club, the host organization on this occasion; invocation, Rev. William C. Sanderson; music, chorus of Quaker-town Women's Club; address of welcome, Mrs. Walter W. Ely, president of New Hope Women's Club; response, Mrs. J. H. Hoffman, second vice-president of the county federation; annual reports by president, Mrs. Boyer; recording secretary, Mrs. Walter B. Wiley, Mechanicville, corresponding secretary, Mrs. J. Lawrence Grim, Morrisville; treasurer, Mrs. J. Melvin Freed, Perkasie, and auditors, Mrs. Horace M. Mann and Mrs. Charles A. Liebig, Doylestown.

Talk on highlights of county work during the past year, Mrs. Samuel L. Althouse, first vice-president of federation; introduction of guest of honor, Mrs. Chaffant; address, Mrs. Skipper; awarding of safety prizes, Mrs. Alvin R. Pratt, Morrisville, county chairman of safety, and report of courtesy committee, Mrs. Irvin M. James, Doylestown.

The evening session will begin at 7:30 o'clock with singing in charge of Mrs. Claude Lodge, Southampton, junior county chairman of music. This will be followed by the reports of the registrar and greetings by Miss Maude Funk, president of the New Hope Junior Women's Club. A report of junior activities will be given by Mrs. John H. Elfman, Doylestown, junior representative on the county board.

HULMEVILLE

A visit was paid recently by Mr. and Mrs. William Walton to the former's brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Brown, Salem, N. J.

Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Keen are making their home in the house on Trenton avenue recently vacated by Mr. and Mrs. Frey.

Mrs. G. Russell Harrison, New Brunswick, N. J., is visiting her father, Charles Haefer.

Sunday guests of Miss Pearl Shemeyer were the Misses Josephine and Jennie Markel and Blanche Riggs, Bristol.

CHAPTER XXIX

Chris had no illusion about his future as he prepared for Europe early that fall. He knew that even with the prestige of Vienna behind him it would be a long uphill climb, and that only gradually could he abandon general practice for surgery. His money would go so far and no farther. It would provide for Lily Walters while he was gone, and with care furnish a downtown office on his return.

Nevertheless he went about his preparations blithely, got his steamer ticket, bought a steamer trunk. Katie, taking her two weeks' vacation at that time, watched his preparations with tragic eyes.

"You'll never come back, Chris. Not to us, anyhow."

"Nonsense. It's only for a few months."

One day he actually found Lily with a sewing basket, mending his clothes.

"You might be in an accident over there," she said, "and I'd hate you to be found with holes in your socks."

She had a terror of Europe, a terror of anything unknown and unfamiliar. Nevertheless she was more cheerful during those last weeks, and Chris wondered whether she had been hearing from Dick. Then one morning, smiling, she met him at the foot of the stairs and showed him a registered letter containing five ten-dollar bills.

"I always knew he was a good boy," she said. "No matter what Katie says, he doesn't forget me."

"That's fine," he said with all the conviction he could muster. "Spend it on yourself. You must need a lot of things."

She was very happy that day. She ran next door to tell Miss Barker, and Chris, coming home at lunchtime, found his bed still unmade and a sketchy meal left for him on the table. He ate it philosophically and said nothing when later in the day she came in with her arms full of bundles. Soon he would escape all this, and when he came back, he could make some other arrangement. He would continue to take care of her, but he himself would get away.

And then suddenly and without warning it was Lily who went away, taking herself out of life with a finality so unlike her that even Chris, accustomed to such matters, was sick and cold over the sheer despair of it. One night she got a telegram saying that Dick had been arrested for burglary in Chicago and was being held for trial. She read it in the hall, read it over and over. Then she took it to Chris's office, laid it on the desk for him to find in the morning, and carried off with her a bottle of sleeping tablets left by a sample man that day.

She made no other arrangements, left no letters. Apparently she had simply shaken out of the bottle enough tablets to be sure that she would never awaken, and then gone quietly to bed. When Chris found her, she was lying quietly there, her untidy room littered with clothing she would never wear again, and on the dresser the faded picture of Henry in his broken frame.

It was too late to do anything. She was gone, and Chris stood for some time looking down at her, wondering if he could have prevented it, recalling his own impatience, feeling guilty—as only those who have faced such situations can feel guilty. In this room and this bed had Henry died. "If I go, you'll look after them, won't you?" And he had promised. Mingled with this was a terrible anger at Dick, his young callousness, his cool selfishness.

He could have killed him with his bare hands that morning, with that pitiful wreckage before him; killed him for the weakness which unfitted him for anything but crime; killed him for his cruelty, for his ayness, for being Dick Walters. There was nothing then to tell him that in only a few years he would be fighting to save Dick's life, carrying him through the dark to the roar of guns.

Katie, blank-eyed and dazed, came home from the hospital that day to move like a shadow through the house. She seemed incapable of thought or of action, and Miss Barker, bustling about with morbid activity, finally put her to bed.

"I wish she would cry," she said to Chris out of her new importance. "It's always better if they cry."

It was in the chaos of Miss Barker's house cleaning, in preparation for the funeral, that Chris saw Beverly again, for the first time in more than a year. He came in to find her standing in the back office, a ladder and pails around her and her face white and tired. So unexpectedly was the sight of her that he could find nothing to say.

"You don't mind, do you, Chris? I thought if I could do something—"

"Mind? No, but I imagine everything is being done. It looks like it!"

She was looking at him as if she could not look away, but he was busy pulling out a chair for her.

"Sit down," he said. "I haven't seen you for a long time. How are you?"

"Very well," she said. But she did not take the chair. She was hearing his voice over the telephone that last night before her marriage. "See here, my darling, if you're not sure of this marriage, it's not too late, and trying to reconcile it with his present tone, carefully casual as it was and without feeling."

"I hear that you are going abroad to study."

Her own voice was breathless, but he did not notice it.

"Yes. Very soon."

"You'll like Vienna. Every one does."

"I hope so. My German's pretty rusty."

Why had he never answered that letter of hers? If only she could ask him, even now! But she could not ask this new Chris, casual and polite and detached. He was too far away.

"Would you mind if I sent some flowers from the garden? We still have a good many."

Ah, but that was a mistake, that mention of the garden. Chris finding her crying there and taking her in his arms. She saw him stiffen.

"Thanks. That would be fine."

Then it was over, and he was seeing her out, friendly and smiling. She was smiling, too. They even shook hands, and she wished him a good journey and a good winter.

She went back up the hill to her friends and her dinner, to occasional silent meals with her father at the head of the table and to more than occasional nights when she lay awake for hours listening until Jerry's car came in. For she knew now that this was the way it was to be, and that it would not change.

She did not go to the funeral the next day. For an hour or so Lily was brought down to lie in state in the front office, a few neighbors gathered, and in the back room Katie sat beside Chris and listened to the service, holding tight to his hand.

"Only the two of us left, Chris!" "She's all right now, Katie. Asleep or awake, she's all right."

"But I'm alone, Chris. You're going away, and I'll be alone."

"Hush, dear. Listen."

"I am the resurrection, and the life, said the Lord: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live."

Lily lying there in her new dignity; Katie holding Chris's hand and more conscious of it than of her mother in the next room; and Chris looking back at his failures and God knows what—that was Lily Walters' funeral.

When it was over, he stayed behind to put those flowers of Beverly's on the mound and to gaze across to where Annie Lewis lay in majestic pomp in her marble tomb. Two women, far apart in life, and now meeting in this common resting place.

Katie stayed home for a day or two, her exuberant vitality gone, eating little and sleeping badly. For the sake of propriety Miss Barker remained in the house at night, using Dick's old room; but in the daytime Katie was there alone, a pathetic figure, wandering about the house and watching Chris's preparations for departure with desperate, red-rimmed eyes.

"You can't go and leave me like this, Chris."

"Nonsense. You'll be busy, my dear. I'm not leaving you homeless."

"A hospital isn't a home."

He was relieved when the night came for him to go. Everything was done. Ted Lawrence was taking over his practice for the period of his absence, and early in the evening Chris had handed him his keys and his lists. Miss Andrews had been in, bringing him for some unknown reason a large bunch of roses, and he eyed them wryly. He had seen Ursula, strong again and proud of her baby. "He looks like you, Doctor. And he's gaining every day." In Chicago Dick was safely in jail and awaiting sentence. Chris had even ordered a small headstone for Lily's grave. Now the past was behind him, and he could look ahead.

He had run that part of his race, had reached this particular goal, had even achieved a measure of hope again. Now, in an hour or less—

He was looking at his watch when the doorbell rang, and he opened it to find Katie in the vestibule, with a suitcase at her feet. He knew before she spoke that here was trouble, for she looked crushed, defeated, and she was swaying slightly.

"What's all this?" he demanded. "I've left the hospital, Chris."

"What are you talking about?" "It's true. They would have put me out anyhow, so I left."

She explained, standing among that luggage of his and desperately trying to be coherent. She had made a mistake in the medicines that day; nothing fatal, but they had acted as if she had killed the man. She had stood all she could; then she had told the lot of them what she thought of them and had packed her bag and left.

He stood staring at her, unable at first to face this new problem. A moment ago he had been free. Now—! What on earth to do with her, with that empty house behind him and—remembering Lily—that desperate look in her eyes. He temporized.

"You've been a silly little fool," he told her. "But you're going back, of course. I'll call up Miss Simpson."

"She wouldn't take me back. Anyhow, I'm not going."

He tried to reason with her, still standing in the hall. She couldn't stay in the house, and Miss Barker had gone to the country. He'd leave her at a hotel for the night and arrange for money until she could manage for herself. She was not listening, however, and at last his frayed nerves gave way.

"Listen to me," he said savagely. "I've had enough. I'm fed up, and more. What is it to me that you've made a fool of yourself? I haven't adopted you. I'm not married to you. And by the Lord Harry, if this is some scheme of yours to interfere with my plans, I'll leave you here. You can get along. You're young and strong. You can manage. I'm going."

"Some scheme!" she gasped. "You can't think that, Chris."

"What am I to think?"

In the end he believed her, however. There was desperate truth in her voice. She had been through a lot, she said; her mother and Dick, and now his going away. Especially his going away. She had hardly known what she was doing that day. He had to believe that. She was no killer. Her record was good. But to be left alone like this—

MORRISVILLE HIGH TO SUFFER FROM LOSS OF JOHNNY ROSS

Bulldogs Have Little in The Way of Hurlers For This Season

PAIR OF HOLDOVERS

If New Pitching Material Is Discovered Team May Be A Real Threat

MORRISVILLE, Apr. 17—Among the Lower Bucks County schools struck by the dearth in pitching talent this season is Morrisville High.

With the loss of their star right hand hurler, Johnny Ross, the Bulldogs have little in the way of twirlers for the campaign just ahead. They have a pair of holdovers in big Jesse Huggins and southpaw Leon Okurowski, but that is about as far as it goes. They both must show much more stuff this year than they did last season if the Bulldogs are to be up in the running. Coach John Hoffman has a quintet of hurlers on the staff this year not including the two holdovers. Of the five newcomers, four are right-handers. They are Joe Bresley, a Sophomore; Kiggins, a Freshman; Mark Phillips, and Bob Gorski, all orthodox pitchers. The only portside among the newcomers is Al Bernstein, a Junior.

If Coach Hoffman can root out one or two fairly decent prospects from that corps, the Bulldogs may be a threat to the leading contenders for the title, even if they themselves do not rate much of a chance to cop the only championship a Morrisville team has never won. However, the inexperience of these boys plus the doubtfulness of both Huggins and Okurowski rates the Bulldogs no better than fourth place in the league standings this season.

But when one considers the wealth of material he lost last year and the lack of available material for this year, it is difficult to expect them to be up among the leaders for the simple reason that they will be definitely weakened in every position on the field with the defensive aspect of the game being their best stronghold. But that alone will not win ball games. Thus to pick Morrisville to finish above fourth spot is not logical, at least not at this time.

With a new battery, a shift in both the infield and outfield, Coach Hoffman will present almost an entirely new team that will take the field against the Cardinals in the season's opener Tuesday afternoon.

Catching prospects include Red Thorn and Bill Wilmot, both of whom lack experience. The receiving job may be divided between the two with perhaps the best hitter taking permanent possession.

The inner line of defense will probably consist of Bob Purcell at first, Bill Wilmot at the Keystone sack, the veteran, Jim Yeager, at short, and Dave Seltzer at third. Seltzer has been shifted from second over to the hot corner to replace Bill Wilson, who has been moved to the outfield. Yeager, of course, is a three-year veteran at his old post at short. But both Wilmot and Purcell are newcomers. Other infield prospects include Jim Swope, infield, Harry Wilcox, and Eddie Wallace, who may also play in the garden.

Flyhaws among the squad of 23 for the year include Tom Nueman, Bill Wilson, Pinky Fisher, and probably Jesse Huggins (when and if not on the hill), among the holdovers from last year's squad. The first three will probably be the regulars with Pieleck, Ed Wallace and Vince DeBronze as substitutes.

So far Coach Hoffman has had little batting practice so the power at the plate this season is questionable up to now. The same goes for their defense strength.

Few Trout Streams In Bucks To Lure Anglers

The opening of the trout season Saturday, proved of little interest in Lower Bucks County, due to the fact that the only streams in the county where it is claimed trout are to be found are Mill Creek, Buckingham, and Cooks Creek, between Springtown and Riegelsville. These two were stocked by the State.

Some Bristolians, however, did go to the upper part of the county to try their luck and several Bucks countians went to other counties to fish.

At present suckers and white perch are being caught in the Neshaminy Creek; yellow perch and sun fish at Maple Beach; and large blue-gill sun fish at the Penns Manor Club, near Tullytown.

Sending Fleet To Pacific Result of Secret Word

With the British and French fleets tied up in the Mediterranean and North Sea, the American fleet would remain the only major impediment to Japanese conquest of Southeastern Asia and the rich East Indies.

At the same time, return of the American fleet to the Pacific at this critical moment in European affairs served as a warning to the German and Italian high commands that the United States was disposing its defenses for their utmost effectiveness if war comes.

As paradoxical as it may seem for the fleet to be moved from the Atlantic to the Pacific with outbreak of a war in Europe feared, this is nevertheless, according to high naval authority, true. The combined British and French fleets are more than adequate to cope with the German and Italian fleets so that the latter could be dismissed as a threat to the Atlantic seaboard. Even so, a reinforced Atlantic squadron of 50 warships is being left on the Atlantic to sweep these seas brought into a great national socialist federation of eastern European states under leadership of the Reich, at least Poland, Yugoslavia, Bulgaria, Greece, and maybe Turkey, although I am not so sure of Turkey.

"Those countries which willingly consent will be welcome. Those which resist will be crushed."

"The Soviet union will not fight, and I will not touch her as long as she is quiet. By Autumn I shall be ready with this coalition under Reich control to attack France and Britain. It will be a short war and with my armies fighting on one frontier Germany will be victorious, with the French and British fleets in our hands. Then we enter the third and last stage, establishment of a Pan Germanic throughout the western world.

"We will have the overpowering sea force, Japan will attack America in the Atlantic."

ROME, Apr. 17.—As Chancellor Hitler summoned the Reichstag to hear the full answer to President Roosevelt's peace appeal, Premier Mussolini's inspired press predicted clearly today that unequivocal acceptance was out of the question.

Reflecting official resentment against the alleged "insolence" of the measure, Virginia Gayda, writing in the Giornale d'Italia, accused Mr. Roosevelt of "insincerity" and of fostering an outbreak of European hostilities. Gayda is known as Il Duce's press mouthpiece.

"Italy cannot recognize," Gayda said, "that Roosevelt has any moral or political right to intervene in the European situation."

GIBRALTAR, Apr. 17.—The French navy took over the task of guarding Gibraltar today, as the British Mediterranean fleet was concentrated at Malta.

While a mighty German naval fleet steamed southward for maneuvers, off the Spanish coast, twelve French warships appeared suddenly in Gibraltar harbor, after sailing from their own home ports after secret orders.

They dropped anchor as the British admiralty announced here and in London, that virtually the entire British Mediterranean fleet had arrived at Malta.

Intense naval activity, with the French co-operating closely with the British authorities in the "Rock" started with the surprising arrival of the French fighting vessels.

Prominent Resident of Langhorne Section Dies

A prominent resident of this section, Mrs. Sara Test Edgerton, wife of Joseph J. Edgerton, died at her home "Edgemont Farm," near here, Saturday. Death occurred for Mrs. Edgerton, who was 69, after one week's illness.

The deceased was a former president of Langhorne Sorosis and a member of Middletown Grange and of the Friends Meeting. She was born in Ohio, and had made her home in Bucks County for 25 years. For a period after her marriage she resided in Iowa.

Her husband, and the following children survive: Mrs. R. Walker Jackson, Newtown; J. Russell, Westtown; Charles T. Langhorne; Mrs. A. Royal Tillinghast, Providence, R. I.; R. Donald, Burholme; and Alene Edgerton, Langhorne. Two sisters also remain, namely: Mrs. M. P. Hall and Mrs. Emily C. Pierpont, Lansdowne.

The services will be held in the Orthodox Friends Meeting House, Fallsington, on fourth month, 18th, at two p. m. Interment will be in Friends Burial Ground, Fallsington. Friends may call this evening at the Horner funeral home, here.

Student Council Meets At Bensalem High School

representatives of six high schools were in attendance.

The meeting, featured by a brief, but interesting address, was in charge of the county council president, Norman Miller, of this place.

Delegations of the student council of Langhorne-Middletown High School gave a report of the survey concerning the activities of student councils in the high schools in the county. New amendments to the council's constitution were adopted.

The guest speaker on this occasion was George R. Barber, New Britain, a vocational teacher in the schools of Philadelphia, who spoke on the value of student government. More of the 17 high schools in the county, he said, should show an interest in this form of school government.

It was decided during the business session to hold the next meeting in the Fall at Buckingham High School.

At the conclusion of the business session a banquet was enjoyed and this was followed by dancing.

High schools represented at the meeting were Bristol, Langhorne-Middletown, Buckingham, Quakertown, Bensalem and New Hope.

Officers of the association are as follows: President, Norman Miller, Bensalem; vice president, Betty Roberts, Langhorne-Middletown; secretary, Mildred Overpeck, Buckingham, and business manager, Robert Woodward, Lower Makefield.

Democrats of County Hear Jack Kelly Speak

DOYLESTOWN, Apr. 17 — With about 200 men and women from various sections of Bucks county in attendance at the annual Jeffersonian dinner held at the Doylestown Country Club, Wednesday night, John B. Kelly, chairman of the Philadelphia central committee of the Democratic party, told a number of good stories, lived up to his reputation as a speaker and an immaculate dresser, and paid a tribute to the Democratic workers in Bucks county.

Some speakers criticized the Republican party for "throwing Democrats out of work in State and county jobs." This brought a smile to the faces of many who realized that the New Dealers became famous for that when they took over Pennsylvania temporarily.

A turkey dinner was served the banqueteers, with the following at the head tables: Dr. John A. Flood, New Hope, the Democratic county chairman; Webster S. Achey, Doylestown attorney; Mrs. Edward C. Hancock, Warrington, a member of the State committee; Miss Marie Bickert, Philadelphia, president of the Jeffersonian Club of Philadelphia; Father James M. Boyce, Doylestown; Mrs. Deknatel, Mrs. James M. Shellenberger, county vice-chairman; Robert L. Clymer, County Treasurer; Charles Binger, Furlong, treasurer of the Democratic party in Bucks; Frederick Bickert, Philadelphia; County Commissioner Calvin S. Moyer, Quakertown.

Those responsible for the success of the meeting were Mrs. Hancock and Charles Binger, who served as co-chairmen.
